Section Description:

The issue of interreligious and interconfessional dialogue acquires nowadays an all-embracing character. The importance of this issue is determined by both globalization and regionalization tendencies. The interplay of the two is creating the type of evolving environment in the world culture, whereby all relationships, including those of interconfessional and intercultural nature suggest diversity, not likeness. This doesn't mean confrontation of different cultures, but rather is testimony of a new phase in the evolution of culture – that of setting up of a new dialogue as the foundation of sustainable development. As a result the dynamics of the interconfessional, intercultural dialogue is rationalized in modern times as having very much to do with national security and security of culture, whether you look at it from the point of view of broad association of culture with philosophy, history, religious studies, and anthropology. The result of this research-oriented interest and greater attention to the issue of interconfessional and intercultural dialogue in general is its realization as the paradigm of the culture of the future, the central value of the vision of the World of tomorrow.

The Section's deliberations will feature the following issues:

– Analysis of modern socio-cultural situation and philosophical and cultural foundations of the development of intercultural and interconfessional dialogue today;

- Effective practical recommendations on expanding communication domain for representatives of various religious groups, confessions, cultural traditions, various institutions of civil society, etc.;
- Realization of interconfessional and intercultural dialogue as an effective mechanism of lowering the danger of greater risks in cultural relationships.

The Sections's program goals

- Theoretical analysis of reasons for interconfessional and intercultural conflicts in the globalized world;
- The culturological substantiation of effective ways interconfessional and intercultural communication;
- Elaboration of practical recommendations for expanding communication space for representatives and leaders of various religious groups, confessions, institutes of civil society, as well as various cultural and religious traditions;
- Finding ways and mechanisms for eradication of negative effects of extremism and terrorism disguised by religious motivation;
- Elaboration of practical recommendations on the realization of the concept of Russia's religious policy aimed at securing fundamental internationally recognized rights of citizens to freedom of conscience and creed, as well as at preservation and development of historically determined religious traditions of Russia's many peoples.

The Section's Pragmatic Goals:

- Determining effective ways of cooperation of states and societies in the interests of securing civil partnership, as well as interconfessional and intercultural dialogue;
- Rethinking dialogue of cultures and confessions, which would allow to detect soft points and formulate with greater precision the chances es for harmonization of relationship between them, promote greater consolidation of society;

- Elaboration of a whole set of proposals for the sake of creating a universal (common) socio-cultural space, including that of Russia and CIS, where cultural diversity, dialogue of cultures, religions and confessions should be maintained;

- Search for conditions of harmonic coexistence of individuals, groups of people and communities representing different cultures and creeds;

- Use of the main achievements and conclusions of the Section's deliberations for the development of the methodological basics of the strategy for furthering interconfessional and intercultural dialogue;

SECTION II: CULTURAL DIVERSITY: PERSPECTIVES OF A DIALOGUE FOR REGIONAL PATTERNS OF DEVELOPMENT

Section meetings hold in three sessions:
Parallel Panel I: 9.00 a.m. – 11.30a.m.;
Parallel Panel II: 12.00p.m. – 14.00p.m.;
Parallel Panel III: 15.00p.m. – 17. 00.

9.00 a.m. – 17.00 p.m.
Location: Hall № 7 (Building II)

Section Description: According to analysis of the contemporary socio-cultural situation, sharpening of inter-religious and inter-cultural conflicts confirms a need of new cultural and religious paradigms. This problem is closely connected with such concepts, as “cultural diversity”, “multi-polar world”, “inter-religious and inter-cultural dialogue”, which are guiding lines for the process of sustainable development of the tolerant society. Today, in terms of globalization, the present-day socio-cultural situation produces a special interest for interdisciplinary researches, particularly with relation to phenomena of tolerance and intolerance of society, multi-cultural situation and transnational culture. The concept of “future culture” will possess the effect of prognosis and paradigm value only in case if the problems, indicated above, are comprehended from the humanitarian point of view, as well as from the interdisciplinary position.

The Points of Discussion:

- cultural diversity as a strategy of inter-religious and inter-cultural dialogue;
- problems of tolerance and intolerance; actualization within society and the Humanities;
- exposure of intolerance by the example of recusancy, extremism, terrorism;
- prerequisites for tolerance and intolerance in the contemporary mass media;
- the role of the mass media in decrease of inter-religious and inter-cultural contradictions risk;
- ways of effective maintenance of cultural diversity in regional and globalization contexts.

Programme Goals:

- scientific and theoretic understanding of “cultural diversity” and “multi-polar world” concepts;
- comprehension of tolerance as a dialogic category that is fundamental in the newly appeared inter-religious and inter-cultural dialogue;
- to conceptualize a model of “sustainable development” in the space of inter-religious and inter-cultural dialogue;
- cultural substantiation of effective inter-religious and inter-cultural cooperation;
- trends of inter-religious and inter-cultural dialogue and their classification in terms of globalization;
- cultural diversity within cultural policy and the modern religious paradigm;

Pragmatic Goals:

- development of effective forecasting methods of tolerance upbringing;
- understanding of existent forms of intolerance;
- comprehension of extremism: on the one hand, taking it as the universal, sharp problem, not only political, but also – socio-cultural one; on the other hand – taking it as the opponent for “cultural diversity” and “multi-polar world” concepts;
- activation of the tolerance idea, which correlates with globalization, as the ground for achievement of social unity;
- methods of tolerance intensification, particularly for the Russian society; typical displays of this process, such as ethnic tolerance (regarding relations between different ethnic groups), political tolerance (between subjects of politics), gender tolerance, tolerance in the spheres like “resident – migrant” or “region – center”;
- activation of the empathic and dialog components of tolerance as aspiration for mutual understanding between confronting individuals, groups, religions or communities.

SECTION IV: MIGRATION PROCESSES AND ETNOCULTURAL DIVERSITY IN TODAY'S WORLD: THE GLOBALIZATION CONTEXT

Section meetings hold in three panels:
Parallel Panel I: 9.00 a.m. – 11.30a.m.;
Parallel Panel II: 12.00p.m.– 14.00 p.m.

9.00 a.m.– 17.00 p.m..

Location: Lecture room 1192 (Building II)

Section Description: Migratory process affects the social and economic situation in Russia. While restraining natural decrease of population, it has a positive influence on demography. At the same time, the migrants, whose ethnic, religious and social structure differs from the host population, can cause destabilization of social life. In this regard, there is a need of purposeful cultural assimilation of migrants with further integration into the host community. But this activity does not necessarily mean that migrants must assimilate. The more promising way is keeping their ethno-cultural identity and broadening cultural variety of local communities.

The Points of Discussion:

- characteristics of ethno-cultural diversity in Russia;
- realization of diaspora`s and migrants` ethno-cultural demands;
- national and cultural autonomy in the Russian Federation: potential and significance for ethno-cultural enrichment;
- problems of migrants` cultural assimilation;
- the meaning of migrants` ethno-cultural integration for overcoming of ethnic extremism.

Programme Goals:

- to discuss problems of migrants` assimilation into the Russian society;
- exchange of opinions concerning integration into host (local and regional) communities;
- to analyze realization of the Federal Act for “National and Cultural Autonomy”.

Pragmatic Goals:

- to work out recommendations for the migrants from neighboring and foreign countries in order to optimize a process of their cultural assimilation and further integration into the Russian society;
- to discuss and make suggestions regarding national cultural policy that promotes ethno-cultural diversity;
- to define a pattern of ethno-cultural policy in the regions of the Russian Federation.

Symposium Description.

Development of information and communicative systems, which form the global media-space nowadays, affects the state of the present-day epoch cardinally. Mass media and the Internet are leaders in this sphere of value-semantic and ideological influence upon society and a person. They are not only the translators of cultural achievements helping to accept or deny some values, but also – the systems that actively form a new axiological space. The way mass media interpret or estimate existent socio-cultural events, display of nationalism, racism, xenophobia or religious discrimination may cause different – sometimes unpredictable – consequences. In some cases they are – destabilization, transformation of the hierarchy of values, alteration of the person's moral consciousness, “implantation” of stereotypes that shatter cultural and value foundations within the society. In other cases they become a step to positive processes, like dissemination of democratic and humanistic values, or new ideas of inter-cultural communication within the global world. A civil society that accepts self-regulating tendencies promotes a compromise between the public contradictions (audience – pressmen) and the lawful contradictions (standards of self-expression, prohibition of international strife, while taking the media only as the tool for extremism and xenophobia counteraction). Widening of the dialog's paradigm and tolerance, as well as strengthening of the social solidarity discourse are mainly determined with notional points of media texts and personal attitude towards the matter of the news. Thereby, the information possesses a quality of the most valuable national property and its strategic resource. The problems of the media (the Internet, radio, television, press) psychological effect upon people's mind, individuals, culture and civilization in general, defining abilities and a level of this effect – require serious attention from the direction of the scientific and public thought.

The Points of Discussion:

- a civil society as the socio-cultural space for interactions of individuals and communities, which admit the importance of civil consent and mutual respect, while taking into account principles of individual activity and responsibility;
- abilities of the media and the Internet at their present-day point for elimination of xenophobia, extremism and ethno-cultural conflicts;
- the Internet as the communicative space for information exchange and on-line ways of inter-cultural communication in terms of digital disparity problem-solving and maintaining of linguistic diversity;
- saturation of communicative space with new symbols, myths, ideologies; forming of the specific virtual space where the mass language, mass culture, mass values and hybrid forms of culture appear and extend;
- the media as the channels for interaction of ethno-national cultures, subcultures, political and public organizations working on the problem of inter-cultural and inter-religious dialogue; forms of their influence on contemporary socio-cultural processes;
- civil responsibility of the media regarding a “media-version of reality”; State functions in development and maintenance of integration communications that form national-cultural identity;
- the role of the media in satisfaction of moral, cognitive, cultural-normative demands of social groups and individuals.

Programme and Pragmatic Goals of the Section:

- to observe the media-space and its abilities as the integrator of socio-cultural space, the one that supports a dialogue between federal, civil and religious institutions;
- to discuss correlation between self-organization and regulation of the media-space in terms of democratization and formation of the civil society;

- to define the meaning of the press and audio-visual communications in forming of the dialogic space and tolerance towards “different” people – the people who share different religions and cultural traditions;
- to analyze the regulatory power of media processes; to interpret the media as a factor that actually affects most public relations;
- to set up practical recommendations in order to support those mass media which facilitate inter-cultural and inter-religious dialogue and speak against any demonstration of racism, xenophobia, religious discrimination, thus providing tolerance of the information space as a base for social stability and sustainable development.

Spivak Dmitry Leonidovich – UNESCO Chair for comparative studies of spiritual traditions, the specifics of their cultures and interreligious dialogue (Russia, Saint-Petersburg)

Concepts

Inter-religious dialogue has been defined by UNESCO as a flagship activity. There is no doubt that this stance is both constructive and timely, judging by considerable impact of peace-making efforts of the religious leaders and members of their communities, as part of conflict appeasement and resolution, as well as initiation of full-scale intercultural rapprochement.

The academic community can contribute to this effort by:

– clearly formulating strategic objective(s) of inter-religious dialogue, along with its basic methodologies and limitations;

- strictly defining conceptual notions, necessary for its structuring and strengthening, as well as epistemological procedures which link secular and religious thought in the same space of dialogue;
- reassessing traditional religions, modern religious movements, and modern spirituality as the main actors in inter-religious dialogue worldwide;
- outlining “good practices” which allow the dialogue participants to single out, isolate, and reduce the impact of spiritual and/or religious radicalism upon regional and international situations
- delineating guidelines in which inter-religious dialogue is to be supported by state structures, non-governmental organizations, and societal activists;
- mapping routes whereby it is possible to obtain the proper balance between systematic education and mass media, academic discourse and free discussion, action and meditation/deliberation, as facets of inter-faith communication;
- ensuring constructive ways for inter-religious dialogue to contribute to and enhance cultural diversity;
- implementing constructive patterns of inter-faith and inter-cultural dialogue into the general context of dialogue between the East and the West; the North and the South.

Special topics:

- inter-faith issues as part of present-day educational systems and curricula: problems and prospects;
- cultural diversity and mutual influence of cultures in the changing world: upgrading principles of inter-ethnic and inter-confessional communication.
- methodological guidelines and ‘good practices’ in implementing constructive inter-religious dialogue in the context of the present-day, globalized world;
- inter-faith dialogue as integral and constructive part of inter-cultural rapprochement: problems and prospects.
