International Meeting on Underwater Cultural Heritage and Site Protection

In support of the implementation of the 2001 Convention on the Protection of the Underwater Cultural Heritage

UNESCO Headquarters, 22 – 23 September 2016, Room II / IX, Fontenoy building

Context

An International Meeting on Underwater Cultural Heritage Sites Protection will be held on 22 and 23 September 2016 at UNESCO Headquarters (Room II, Fontenoy building) in support of the implementation of the 2001 Convention on the Protection of the Underwater Cultural Heritage.

It will focus on the issue of quantification and identification of human threats to underwater cultural heritage, especially by pillaging and commercial exploitation, and on preventive measures to be taken. International experts will present their experiences, followed by a round table which will allow the exchange of views regarding the effectiveness of the means used.

The meeting will bring together representatives of the States Parties to the UNESCO 2001 Convention and other States, and experts representing different national authorities (Culture and Foreign Ministries, Navy, Customs, Coastguards, etc.) and international organizations (UNESCO, INTERPOL, etc.).

Underwater cultural heritage has become increasingly accessible with the development of diving techniques, which allow not only scientists and archaeologists, but also treasure hunters and wreck explorers to reach greater depths. The looting of underwater archaeological sites and the destruction of their context has increased rapidly and threatens to deprive humanity of this heritage. The pillaging and dispersion of archaeological heritage is no longer restricted to land-based sites, with treasure-hunting now greatly increasing in underwater sites. Nevertheless, while many States have strengthened the preservation of their heritage on land, most underwater cultural heritage remains unprotected. Treasure-hunting is not the only issue. Sites have also been damaged by trawling, mineral extraction and the laying of pipelines.

The UNESCO Convention on the Protection of the Underwater Cultural Heritage is aimed at providing States Parties with an international legal mechanism to protect their submerged heritage. However, ratification must be accompanied by the effective national implementation of the Convention and mobilization of the adequate means to support it.

The main objective of the international meeting is to continue to reinforce the implementation of the 2001 Convention on the Protection of the Underwater Cultural Heritage, especially with regard to practical questions such as site preservation and monitoring, as well as existing measures to prevent illicit trafficking of underwater cultural heritage.
